THE DAILY NOVELETTE

JUSTICE.

"Good afternoon, Mrs. Whitebean. What can I do for you today?" asked Snickers, the grocer.

"How much is your forty-cent butter?" asked Mrs. Whitebean.

"Forty cents, special," replied the grocer after a moment's thought.

"I'll take a pound and a quarter," "Right," said Snickers, as he wrapped up three-quarters of a pound of rancid butter. "What else?"

"A pound and an eighth of cheese," "Right," said the grocer, and he reached under the counter for three ounces of mouldy cheese that had been there since Tuesday a week. "What else?"

"A loaf of bread and three pounds of frankfurters,"

"Right," And Snickers wrapped a loaf of extra stale bread and a pound and a half of half-smoked bacon had been condemned by the city inspector two weeks before. "What else?"

"That's all," said Mrs. Whitebean, as she picked up her basket.

"Remember, Mr. Snickers, you dine at my house tonight."

AUTO TRIP TO THE COAST IS PLEASANT ONE

Attorney Carr's Sister and Her Husband Having Delightful Cross-Country Trip.

A Telegram representative, interviewing Attorney Louis A. Carr, inquiring of the success of Clarksburg's only visitors to the exposition by the overland automobile route, Dr. and Mrs. E. M. Peary, formerly Miss Lillian A. Carr, is informed regarding this trip by machine, as follows:

"Dr. and Mrs. Peary left Clarksburg August 16, and when last heard from, September 6, had successfully covered the first three weeks of their voyage. The trip, they state, is proving to be wonderful, beyond conception and filled with most interesting experiences. On September 5 they were at Pocatello, Idaho. Their itinerary from Pocatello, planned and mapped out for the last week, was directly north to Yellowstone Park, whence they expected to reach Salt Lake City, Utah, yesterday. Continuing on their journey they desert this present week, and arrive at their destination by the coming Sunday, but it is hardly possible that this will be achieved as they go southwest from Salt Lake City and must pass through the Grand Canyon in Arizona. The desert and through the canyon look like too much travel for one week.

Leaving Clarksburg they proceeded to Parkersburg and then through Athens, Columbus and Lima, in Ohio, Fort Wayne, Plymouth and South Bend, in Indiana; then to Chicago, where a stop was made for two days and the loudest noise-making "Klaxon" was added to the machine.

From Chicago their second week's travel took them through Aurora and Rock Island, in Illinois, and then through Davenport and Des Moines, in Iowa, and from there they went on to Cheyenne, Wyo. Wonderfully good roads were encountered over this travel and the broad expanse of the West was first met when they crossed the Mississippi river at Rock Island. This week they met the western whom they described as being very hospitable and of a most pleasant disposition. They talk to you whether they know you or not; they want to know where you are from and where you are going, and are most willing and desirous of doing anything for you that they can.

The third week they were en route from Des Moines to Cheyenne and passed through Omaha and Lincoln, Neb., and while in Nebraska the late secretary of state's home was visited. From Cheyenne they turned directly south, taking a detour to visit Denver, and they spent two days there and visited Pike's Peak.

"In the Nebraska country they registered at hotels where rooming accommodations alone are furnished and meals are had in the restaurants. Prairie dogs reminding you of large rats, were encountered and many automobile tourists carry rifles and shoot them for sport's sake, and in this country the cowboy looks like the cowboy in the movies. Just before reaching Cheyenne the first accident befell them, when a bad hole in the road broke the fan belt, disconnected the speedometer, jarred left bank of the Neva, on a site bequeathed to Peter the Great by his high admiral, Count Apraksin. The Empress Anne first made her residence in the admiral's house, which was pulled down in 1754, and the foundations of the winter palace laid. The building was first completed in the reign of Catherine the Great. The whole interior of the palace was destroyed by fire in December, 1837, when valuables estimated at $20,000,000 were consumed. It was restored on an even more elaborate scale in 1839. The structure is four stories high, or about eighty feet, with a frontage of 455 feet and a width of 350 feet. The principal entrance, the "Perron des Ambassadeurs," is from the Neva river. Connected with the winter palace is the Hermitage of Catherine the Great, where the renowned used played first bohemian in a bohemian throng.

"There is a table hung on the walls of the palace, draped with a green curtain which contains Queen Catherine's by-laws for the Hermitage societies. They were: 1. Leave your rank outside, as well as your hat and especially your sword. 2. Leave your right of precedence, your pride, and any similar feeling outside the door. 3. Be gay, but do not spoil anything; do not break or know anything. 4. Sit and stand as you will, without reference to anybody. 5. Talk moderately and not very loud, so as not to make the ears and heads of others ache. 6. Argue without anger and without excitement. 7. Neither sigh nor yawn, nor make anybody do or heavy. 8. In all innocent games, whatever one proposes, let all join. 9. Eat whatever is sweet and savoury, but drink with moderation, so that each may find his legs on leaving the room. 10. Tell no tales out of school; whatever goes in at one ear must go out at the other before leaving the room.

"Good rules all, but rules difficult for any but a queen to hold before her friends. The penalty for breaking the rules was the drinking of a glass of cold water for every offense. The queen was most severe with those who broke the tenth commandment; they were never again admitted to the Hermitage, after being once found guilty of little-tattle.

"An immense square before the palace, gives it the proper dignity of setting. Within it is said, 3,000 people can dance under the blazing light crystals at one time, while 2,000 people can be seated at the great dinner gatherings. The palace is a treasure house of relics and paintings. One of the finest collections of pictures in Russia is hung on the palace walls, among them numerous excellent war pictures. Among the jewels stored here, there is a scepter with one of the largest diamonds in Europe, 194 3-4 carats, the great Orloff diamond, which was originally the eye of a lion that crouched before the throne of the Great Mogul. When the czar is in the vicinity of his capital, the Imperial standard floats from the winter palace flagstaff."

off a grease cap and silenced the horn. From Denver they journeyed back to Cheyenne and struck out for Pocatello, Idaho, passing through Rawlins auto hold-ups were reported, but the Clarksburgers went through without losing their valuables. From Rawlins they went seventy-five miles without seeing any habitation, whatsoever, no houses, fences, automobiles, live stock or human beings. They saw only coyotes that ran alongside the car and the rattlesnakes behind the cactus bushes. While in this country and on the Red desert they met, with their second accident. A crossed wire caused a short circuit, sending smoke from the steering wheel and flashes of fire from the dash board. The water bags which are carried strapped to the car were quickly made ready, but the car did not catch fire and the trouble was soon corrected and the journey continued without further mishap, excepting the first puncture of the trip was received shortly afterwards.

"The best road encountered by the Clarksburgers so far on their trip was the stretch between Denver and Cheyenne. Over this road they did fifty miles one hour, and fifty-two another hour—the fastest time made, and the fastest they ever drove
